

Quentin Schultze, “Ten Tips that Will Transform your Teaching”

Description:

"Adequate" teaching is the implied standard at most colleges and universities. Few teachers master the craft. This is largely because great teaching is more art than science. Master teachers normally have to learn the art by observing their own master teachers (if they have any), co-teaching with master teachers, or being mentored by a master teacher. Moreover, most teaching courses and workshops fail to live up to the standard of master teaching; they focus on educational technique rather than the relational aspects of teaching and learning.

Here's an opportunity to learn from master teacher Quentin Schultze, who rates consistently among the top teachers at a large college known for many great instructors. Recipient of the prestigious Presidential Award for Exemplary teaching at Calvin College, Quin will share 10 basic, practical, relational tips that can transform adequate teachers into master teachers.

Quin says, "I love teaching. I've worked hard, studying the methods of some of the finest teachers in the country, to discern how to engage, motivate, and celebrate students as adult learners." He adds, "I never call my college students 'kids.' That word alone explains much about what's wrong with college teaching today. It sets the bar low, eclipses a collegial spirit, and positions the teacher as youth leader."

In this 90-minute session, Quin will provide an overview of some of the most important material from the all-day workshop he offers to the entire faculty of Christian colleges, universities, and seminaries. Includes PowerPoint and Word documents that participants can download and keep.
