

Robert S. Fortner, Professor of Communication and Media

B.A. with distinction, Otterbein College, M.A., Indiana University, Ph.D., University of Illinois. Dr. Fortner joined the PBA faculty in the School of Communication and Media in January 2015. Prior to PBA he taught at Northwestern University, Drake University, the State University of New York, George Washington University, Calvin College, the American University in Bulgaria and Hope College. He has also taught courses at the University of Addis Ababa, and Uganda Christian University, and lectured at universities in Kenya, Russia, Bulgaria, Mongolia, and Taiwan. He has written or edited nine books and is currently co-authoring another on global media ethics. His areas of research include international communication, political economy, new technologies and implications for human life, cultural history and intercultural communication, and communication ethics, especially in the global arena. He has also worked extensively with many international ministry organizations and has worked on their behalf in more than forty countries, including many in post-conflict situations. He has also advised many evangelical organizations on applications of new technologies, ethics in ministry practice, and the impacts of media programs for ministry. He has also conducted research and provided counsel to the BBC, Radio Deutsche Welle, the Central Intelligence Agency and the Voice of America. He continues to be Director of the International Center for Media Studies, which provides research data on communication technology development in the two-thirds world. Finally, he is married with three grown children and five grandchildren.